TAILORED SECURITY SUPPORT FOR TRANSAID

I'd been with Transaid for two years and was about to go and work for them in Kano, northern Nigeria when I took the Security Management course at RedR UK's HQ in London. The five-day course was very informative, the simulations were realistic, and the take-away materials very practical.

It was seven months later when we heard that Boko Haram had launched attacks in two towns either side of our location. As the project team discussed options for evacuation, I felt well placed to contribute and indeed refreshed my memory of the security principles using the RedR UK materials on my laptop. I am grateful that RedR UK's training equipped me to help with the management of this situation and provided a certain amount of peace of mind under difficult circumstances.

We have since put two of our other programmes team on the same course. RedR UK's Security Team have also supported us as we developed our security policy and facilitated crisis simulations with our Senior Management Team. Our security approach is now robust enough that our partners often ask us for our policies and country plans as examples for them to use in the field!

I can categorically state that since developing a relationship with RedR UK, Transaid's security approach has gone from non-existent to comprehensive. As a Senior Management Team, we feel confident that we have the tools and understanding to operate in insecure environments without putting our teams at risk.'

Gary Forster, Chief Executive Transaid.
